Indonesia’s 2014 national elections: a quick guide

Dr Cameron Hill
Foreign Affairs, Defence and Security

On 9 April, Indonesians will vote in legislative elections at the national, provincial, and district levels. There are 12 parties contesting the national parliamentary elections. On 9 July, Indonesians will again go to the polls to choose their next president. This quick guide provides a brief overview of the national legislative and presidential elections, including the key parties and candidates, as well as links to supplementary resources.

Facts and figures

The Constitution:
• The Republic of Indonesia is a representative republic in which the President is both the head of state and the government.
• The amended 1945 Constitution of Indonesia is the foundation for the country’s system of government and provides for a separation of legislative, executive and judicial powers.

The Legislature:
• At the national level there are two elected legislative assemblies in Indonesia: the House of Representatives (Dewan Perwakilan Rakyat/DPR) and the Regional Representative Council (Dewan Perwakilan Daerah/DPD).
  – the national DPR has a total of 560 representatives from 77 multi-member electoral districts, with three to ten seats in each electoral district (depending on district population), elected from political party lists through an open-list proportional representation (PR) system.
  – the DPD has 132 representatives, four from each of 33 provinces. Nonpartisan candidates from the respective provinces are elected through a single-non-transferable-vote system. However, only the DPR fully legislates while the DPD has a more limited mandate.

The Executive:
• The President is the head of the executive branch and can be elected for a maximum of two five-year terms.
• A political party or coalition of political parties that wins 25 per cent of the vote or wins at least 20 per cent of the seats in the DPR can nominate candidates for President and Vice President (running as a pair).

The voters:
• Total population: 237.56 million (2010)
• Estimated number of eligible voters: 187,977,268 (2013)
• Estimated number of polling stations: 550,000
Voter turnout in previous legislative elections: 93% (1999); 84% (2004); 71% (2009)

Election timeline

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Date</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>2012/2013</td>
<td>Party registration and non-official campaigning</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>16 March 2014</td>
<td>Official campaigning starts, including public rallies and mass media advertising</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5 April</td>
<td>Campaign blackout starts</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>9 April</td>
<td>Legislative elections, unofficial counts released</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7-9 May</td>
<td>Official legislative results released</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>9 July</td>
<td>Presidential election (first round)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Background on Indonesia’s political and electoral system

Democratisation: achievements and challenges

Parliament

Political parties

- U Fionna and A Arifianto, Getting to know the contestants of the 2014 Indonesian parliamentary elections, Perspectives, no.14, Institute of Southeast Asian Studies, 10 March 2014.
- S Sherlock, Indonesia’s third democratic transition: are the parties ready for the 2014 presidential election?, Centre for Democratic Institutions, April 2013.

Electoral system and election management

Islam and politics

‘Money politics’
• FB Timur and A Priamarizki, The economics of Indonesia’s election campaigns, S. Rajaratnam School of International Studies, no. 40, 26 February 2014.

Media, including social media
• The road to 2014: corruption, the media and parties’ electability, S. Rajaratnam School of International Studies, policy report, February 2014.
• J Chen and A Priamarizki, Popular mandate and the coming-of-age of social media’s presence in Indonesia politics post-reformasi, S. Rajaratnam School of International Studies, no. 268, 18 February 2014.

Women and politics

Election issues

Australia’s electoral assistance to Indonesia
• Department of Foreign Affairs and Trade, Australia Indonesia electoral support program, 2011–2015, final design document, February 2012.

National political parties and current seats in DPR*

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Party Name</th>
<th>Seats</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1. National Democrat (NasDem) Party</td>
<td>108</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2. National Awakening Party (PKB)</td>
<td>59</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3. Justice and Prosperity Party (PKS)</td>
<td>93</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4. Indonesian Democratic Party of Struggle (PDI-P)</td>
<td>39</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5. Golkar Party</td>
<td>30</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>6. Gerindra Party</td>
<td>148</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7. Democratic Party</td>
<td>42</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>8. National Mandate Party (PAN)</td>
<td>15</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>9. United Development Party (PPP)</td>
<td>0</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>10. Hanura Party</td>
<td>0</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11. Crescent Moon and Star Party (PKB)</td>
<td>0</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

* Listed in order of 2014 legislative ballot. As well as twelve nationally registered parties, three local Aceh parties will run for seats in the provincial and district parliaments. Aceh is the only province where local parties can contest elections. Source: Office of National Assessments, Snapshot: Indonesia’s legislative elections, Open Source Centre, 4 March 2014. See also: U Fionna and A Arifianto, ‘Getting to know the contestants of the 2014 Indonesian parliamentary elections’, Perspectives, no.14, Institute of Southeast Asian Studies, 10 March 2014.

Profiles and biographies of key presidential candidates

‘The frontrunner’—Joko Widodo:
Joko Widodo (nicknamed “Jokowi”), the youngest of the presidential candidates, entered politics only nine years ago as mayor of the central Java city of Solo. In 2012, Widodo became the governor of Jakarta and his unorthodox and practical approach has proved to be popular. In March 2014, he was announced as the presidential candidate for the Indonesian Democratic Party of Struggle (PDI-P), the party headed by former President Megawati Sukarnoputri. Even before the confirmation that he would run as a candidate, Jokowi has consistently topped most credible polls. To date, he has not given any in-depth interviews on his approach to issues of national importance, including foreign affairs, making it somewhat difficult to gauge what the policy implications of a Widodo presidency might be.

‘The strongman’—Prabowo Subianto:
Lt. General (ret.) Prabowo Subianto, a former head of Indonesia’s Special Forces (Kopassus), is the candidate for the Greater Indonesia Movement Party (Gerindra). Prabowo presents himself as a decisive figure who advocates a nationalist agenda.

‘The businessman’—Aburizal Bakrie:
A prominent businessman and a cabinet minister in the first Yudhoyono administration, Aburizal Bakrie is running as the candidate for Golkar, the party of former President Suharto. Bakrie has struggled in the polls to date.
- A Bakrie, Indonesia: moving forward, speech to the US–Indonesia Society, transcript, 27 November 2011.

PD’s choice?
The Democrat Party (PD) of the current President, Susilo Bambang Yudhoyono, has been plagued by a series of corruption scandals and is lagging in most polls. PD will choose its presidential candidate through a ‘political convention’ process.
- The Democratic Party convention and Yudhoyono’s possible game plan, S. Rajaratnam School of International Studies, policy report, March 2014.

News, polls and analysis
- Tempo.Co—2014 general elections
- The Jakarta Post—election watch
- The Jakarta Globe—2014 Indonesia presidential elections
- New Mandala (Australian National University)—Indonesia votes
- The Asia Foundation (USA)—Indonesia news
- International Foundation for Electoral Systems (USA)—Indonesia
- National Democratic Institute (USA)—Indonesia

Seminars and events
- The Indonesian election: what really happened?
  Presenters: Dr Dirk Tomsa, Dr Vannessa Hearman, Professor Thomas Reuter, and Dr Dave McRae
- The 2014 parliamentary elections in Indonesia: patterns and consequences
  Presenters: Professor Greg Fealy, Professor Ed Aspinall, Dr Marcus Mietzner